CIGARS: AN INTRODUCTION

HOW IS A CIGAR DEFINED?

A cigar can come in all shapes, sizes, strengths, colours, flavours, prices... There are several countries which produce cigars across the world each, with different characteristics. You can think of them like wine, different regions, soils, temperatures, climates all add to the variety in each cigar. To be considered a cigar each one must have the following 3 components.

Wrapper: This is a thin leaf that dresses the exterior of the cigar, this is used more for appearance than taste.

Binder: Underneath the wrapper is the binder, this is used for the construction of the cigar and holds it all together.

Filler: The main body of the cigar, this is where the majority of the character, aroma, flavour & strength can be found.

HOW DO I KNOW WHAT TO CHOOSE?

For Havana (Cuban) cigar brands, we can separate them into 5 tiers in regard to their flavour from light to full. For all cigars you can also get a slight indication of how they will smoke as the length & ring gauge can alter the delivery of smoke, temperature the tobacco burns at, flavours on the palate and so on.

The ring gauge of a cigar is the size of its diameter, it is expressed in 64ths of an inch, so a 32-gauge ring is 1/2 an inch and so on.

In terms of length of cigar they can measure from just 3 1/2 inches (90mm) all the way up to over 9 inches (230mm)!

Here's a few key points to note when finally deciding what cigar you would like...

- Wide gauge cigars burn slowly and deliver a higher volume of smoke that covers the palate with the full mixture of flavours.
- Thinner cigars burn quicker and deliver a more concentrated flavour giving a sharper taste.
- Longer cigars allow the smoke to cool slightly as it travels to the palate.
- Cigars are tactical products and for some people it is all about the feel in the hand and between the lips. Some smokers will be loyal to a certain style or brand of cigar.

NOW TIME TO SMOKE...DECISIONS DECISIONS

HOY DE MONTERREY (1865)

Established by a Spaniard name Jose Gener, Hoy de Monterrey takes its name from the world famous plantation in Pinar del Rio. "Hoyo" means "hole" and refers to the low lying position of the field next to the San Juan y Martinez river, while "Monterrey" is the name of the first farmer to cultivate tobacco there.

COHIBA

Habana, Cuba

COHIBA (1966)

Havana's flag ship brand was created for the late President Fidel Castro. Production began in 1966, but the cigars were not released to the public sixteen years later. Cohiba is an ancient Taino Indian word for the bunches of tobacco leaves that Columbus first saw being smoked by Cuba's original inhabitants. So, it was the first name of a cigar - in Cuba at any rate.

PLASENCIA (1865)

Don Eduardo Plasencia left The Canary Islands in search of success and opportunity and started growing tobacco in Vuelta Abajo, Cuba. Castro's regime confiscated the farms. Don Sixto (Don Eduardo's nephew) and his family fled to Mexico with only what they could carry, and later relocated to Nicaragua. In the 70s they moved their farms in Honduras, in the 90's the family went back to Nicaragua to revive the land and raise the production to 33 million cigars a year.
